

DIVISION HISTORY HIGHLIGHTS

- The Division of Agricultural and Food Chemistry is one of the original divisions of the American Chemical Society. It was established on December 30, 1908.
- The Divisions of Industrial & Engineering Chemistry, Organic Chemistry, and Physical Chemistry were the only other divisions to celebrate their 100th anniversaries in 2008.
- The first AGFD program was held at the Detroit meeting, June 29-July 2, 1909. The first paper was “The distillation of whiskey,” delivered by Arthur B. Adams, the chief chemist of the IRS. The fourth paper was given by Elmer V. McCollum, who went on to become the co-discoverer of vitamins A and D, and who devised the letter names for vitamins.
- The first AGFD business meeting, held in conjunction with papers, took place in Boston on December 30, 1909. The first paper there, “Application of electricity to apparatus for water analysis,” was given by Ellen H. Richards, the first American woman to earn a chemistry degree and the founder of the field of home economics.
- The first talk with slides was presented by James S. McHargue at the 10th anniversary meeting in Cleveland, September 9-13, 1918. These were lantern slides, 3.5 x 4” glass plates.
- Four Divisional histories have been published in JAFC:
Clifcorn, L.E. The ACS Division of Agricultural and Food Chemistry. J. Agric. Food Chem. 1959, 7, 544-546.
Zikakis, J.P. Agricultural and Food Chemistry: Accomplishments and Perspectives. J. Agric. Food Chem. 1983, 31, 672-675.
Pattee, H.E. Commemorative History of the Division of Agricultural and Food Chemistry. J. Agric. Food Chem. 2002, 50, 3-6.
Tunick, M.H. and Brine, C.J. One Hundred Years of the Division of Agricultural and Food Chemistry. J. Agric. Food Chem. 2009, 57, 8063-8069.
- Two other ACS divisions originated as Agricultural and Food Chemistry subdivisions. The Fermentation Subdivision was founded in 1946, became the Division of Microbial Chemistry and Technology in 1961, and has been the Biochemical Technology Division since 1989. The Pesticides Subdivision was founded in 1950, became the Division of Pesticide Chemistry in 1968, and was renamed the Division of Agrochemicals in 1985.
- The first book based on an AGFD symposium was “Agricultural Control Chemicals,” published in 1949 as the first volume in the Advances in Chemistry series.
- The Division was incorporated in Washington, DC on June 17, 1999.
